

New book by Dr. Patti Rose, Health Disparities, Diversity, and Inclusion

Lecture and Book Signing

Hosted by:
Dr. Dean G. Smith
Dean
School of Public Health

Date:

March 15, 2017

Time:

12:00 to 2:00 PM

Event:

Lecture and Book Signing by author
Dr. Patti Rose and
Contributing Author
Dr. Annie Daniel

Location:

Medical Education Building
Seminar Room 4 (3rd Floor)
1900 Perdido Street,
New Orleans, LA 70112

Let's Talk About Solutions!

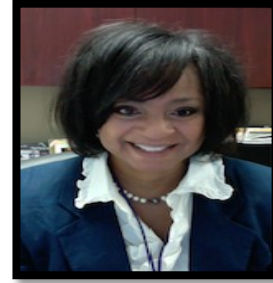

Dr. Rose's book has been a labor of love. She, along with her contributing authors, explores the health status gap in the U.S. along with an exploration of diversity and inclusion. Other social injustice topics include mass incarceration, educational disparities, the school (k-12 children) to prison pipeline and important concerns regarding women, children, rural and urban environments, food injustice and other current, critical issues. The focus of the book is not solely on problems, but SOLUTIONS, in every chapter!

About the Speakers...

Dr. Patti Rose, Author

Dr. Annie J. Daniel,
Contributing Author

Dr. Patti Rose acquired an MPH from Yale University, and her Ed.D from Teachers College, Columbia University. Academically, she has served at various levels (Adjunct Professor, Instructor, and Associate Professor) at several institutions in the U.S. (University of Miami, Florida International University, Springfield College, Worcester State College, Nova Southeastern University and Barry University) and internationally, as a Visiting Professor, in Shanghai, China (Jiatong University) and Guangzhou, China (Jinan University), for the JNU Summer School Program and will do so at Feng Chia University, in Taiwan, soon. She is a Yale University candidate Alumni interviewer, President of Yale University's South Florida Black Alumni Association and serves as a National Project Advisory Committee (NPAC) Member for the Office of Minority Health, US DHHS. Her administrative roles include serving as President and CEO of Plainfield Health Center in Plainfield, New Jersey and as Vice President of Behavioral Health Services at The Jessie Trice Center for Community Health in Miami, Florida. She developed a DVD entitled "Cultural Competency: A Public Health Imperative" for Yale University's School of Public Health, and received their Public Health Service Award for a career that "exemplifies the primacy of the social mission of public health." Dr. Rose has given keynote addresses and presentations/ workshops, for many venues in the U.S. including, LSU, Yale University, Teachers College, Columbia University, LeMoyné College, Ross University, Des Moines University Medical School, Miami Dade College, the American Public Health Association and the National Association of Health Care Executives and internationally in Nairobi Kenya, Barcelona, Spain, Paris, France, Aruba and St. Thomas. Her books include Cultural Competency for Health Administration and Public Health, published by Jones and Bartlett Learning and Cultural Competency for the Health Professions, published by the same publisher. Her newest book is Health Disparities, Diversity and Inclusion: Controversies, Contexts and Solutions. Currently, she serves as President of Rose Consulting, Administrator and writer for her Blog, Natural Is Cool Enough (N.I.C.E.), and she is a Huffington Post Contributor and writes about various topics including the series "50 Countries And Counting: A Naturalista's Travel Adventures, documenting her world excursions with travel tips. Born in Queens, NY, Dr. Rose has lived with her husband and two children in South Florida for 22 years.

Dr. Annie J. Daniel is Director of Veterinary Instructional Design and Outcomes Assessment in Office of Student and Academic Affairs and Associate Professor of Veterinary Medical Education. As Director, she develops, manages, and implements initiatives that facilitate the improvement of faculty pedagogical and assessment skills. She is also responsible for continuing to further develop the outcomes assessment model, curriculum mapping, and instructional design for the Doctor of Veterinary Medicine degree program. She has almost 20 years of experience as an educator and education leadership in higher education, with Dillard University (Assistant Professor of Education, Assistant Director, Teaching, Learning, Technology, and Culture Center and Middle Level Education Program Coordinator), Tulane University School of Medicine (Director, Office of Medical Education & Assistant Clinical Professor), and Des Moines University (Director, Center for the Improvement of Teaching and Learning & Associate Professor of Public Health). Her areas of expertise are educational leadership and pedagogy, curriculum development, course design, educational research, educational technology, program evaluation, measurement and testing, student academic support, faculty development, educational policy development and implementation, and strategic planning. She has traveled extensively nationally and internationally. Her research interests include: Barriers that prevent African American students from entering professional & graduate degree programs, Effects of mentoring on retention, preparedness, and success of African American students in higher education, Deviance when using the Internet, social media, and technology, and Causes and consequences of ineffective use of technology in education. She earned her Doctor of Philosophy in Vocational Education from Louisiana State University in Baton Rouge, LA. She is very proud of being selected by the medical students of Tulane University School of Medicine to receive the W. Clifford Newman Student Advocacy Award for her work as an advocate in support of their academic success.